As it takes about two weeks for hens or pullets to settle down to their new quarters they should be moved early. The moving should be done before they begin to lay, for a shift after egg production begins may set them back for a month to six weeks. Moving pullets around from one house to another is the best means of holding back egg production if they are developing too fast. The United States Department of Agriculture points out that it is highly desirable to bring the pullets in from the range before they begin to lay.
